WHERE IS MARSHALL? WHERE IS MARSHALL?

Marshall country, Ala., lies in a bend of the represent river, rejoining Madison country, which adjoins the Tennessee State line. It mbraces about three hundred eptare rolles, bout four-fifthe of which is mountainons, but nother portions the soil is good and productive. The population before the war was about on thousand. Among the enforces there are a ew blacks, as much desiline as the whites. The country at its best was but a poor one, and id never possess many negroes. To the credit of the blacks, it is said that they are working achieviously where they are enabled to procure un loyment.

The county may be said to be utterly desti-tite. There are not twenty persons in the whole county who have a bare surplus over their individual and abselute needs to keep them, and yet they divide with their fellow-creatures, much more than they are able to spare, in the hope that relief would come to them all in a snort time. Within one mile said a quarter of Judge Wyeth's residence, there live (or, rather, manney to breathe) two nd a quarter of Judge Wyeth's residence, here live (or, rather, manage to breathe) two smiller—one a widow with eix children, ail of thom are gitle but the youngest, and another vidow with seven children, the two youngest of shom are boys. Chloride of lime is among the cheapest and most powerful of artificial disinfectants, and stould be specified as much as possible in sointiem. It is not applicable to large quantities of matter, or to matters rich in amonia, as puthid urine. One pound of chloride of lime to one gallon of water can be distributed by a garden engine, etc., or from a watering pot, after a thorough scrubbing and scraping of stalls, etc. All brooms and other implements, or persons stepping from a duty or partially cleaned place to a clean one, may suffice to bring back infection. Workmen must also be careful to wash their own bodies and hair with soap, and to destroy such clathing as is of little of lime water.

DARGER TO LIBERTY PROM LEGI LATIVE USUS countries, are among the worst enemies of the reople, who fatter only to deceive and beiray them, often tell us that the voice of the people is the voice of G d. Though this is undoubtedly so in many cases, it is a metimes more the voice of the Devil than the voice of God, and ile inspiration from below rather than from Wasn't it so in the French Ralga of Terror? And hasn't it been so in a multitud of instances when a frenzied mob has laid its brastly hands upon some poor panting victim that had incurred its despotic displeasure? The people are but an aggregate of individuals and as there may be led into error, so the whole mess may. He is the best, the truest, the only riend of the people who tells them the truth, whether it gres against the grain or not, We have bad many serm one preached to of the immaculateness and lefallibility of the immediate representatives of the people in contell assembled; but it is perhaps true that darger to our liberties is more likely to stesi upon us from that source than any other. The subject has not, we think, received that consideration which ite great, perhaps vital, importance deserves.

The battles of our forefathers were chiefly directed against royal prerogatives and the acts o' royal satrape; and as representatives in those days were usually selected for their moral worth, probity, and intelligence, rather than for pandering to fanaticism or popular vices, they aturally enough overlooked to a great extent the dangers that might arise under a different state of things from the unbridled license of popular assemblies. They seemed to take it for granted that the popular representatives would always act for the real welfare of the country at large, and that they would not, in the name of f ecdom, parody its reality and enact despot ism They took zealous and jealous care to guard the State against executive encrosed ments, but what eccurity have we against the usurpations of Legislative assemblies? De Lolme, an eminent writer upon government. says with condensed and brilliant brevily: 'It is, without doubt, absolutely necessary for se ou in the constitution of a State to restrain the executive power; but it is still more neces sary to restrain the legislative. What th mer can do by successive steps (I mean sub vers the laws), and through a longer or a short er train of enterprises, the latter does in a moment As its bare will can give being to the iswe, so its bare will can annihilate them; and I may be permitted the expression, the legisative power can change the constitution ; Ged created the light. In order, therefore, to insure stability to the constitution of a State, is indispensably necessary to restrain the legislative authority." In this country, it is true, the National Legissture cannot change the Constitution formally. That work is left exclusively to the States and their people. But the spirit of De Lolme's dec larstion that the 'legislative power can change the constitution as God created the light"-that is, that it can speak and it is done-is as applicatle to the Legislature of this country as to that of any other. The Legislative power can virtually change the Coasti ution by violating or lavading it; and the only barrier there is t the absolute exercise of this regal power is. first, the Executive veto; and, secondly, the autho ity of the Supreme Court. The first of there may be quickly disregarded. A twovote can defeat any veto. There remains only the voice of the Supreme Court tetween the National Legislature and the possithe overthrow-for the time being at least-of the Constitution. But the Supreme Court has no power to enforce its decrees selde from moral power and the authority that accompanies a egal decision per se. It can command, but the execution of its mandates rests with the other departments of the Government; and there is at least one notable instance on record in which the decision of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was disregarded by another department of the Government, whose solemn duty it was to obey and execute the mandate of the Supreme Judge. The National Legislature is, for the time being, practically, almost absolute. It, only, has the ower to raise armice and vote supplies. The President cannot even draw his salary without the anthority of Congress. He is powerless in always do right, and the like supposition may be charliably indulged in reference to every department of the Government, to every court, and to every public functionary in the land. Indeed, we are bound to extend the principle to all men. We are bound to enprose, and the lew always supposes, that men do right till ther acts prove the contrary; and we are not aware that Congress has any patent of infaldbillity. Its members are but men, and facts show with but too much force and clearness that they are controlled by passion or influenced by crrupt motives or are led into error through ignorance and an inability to grasp subjects presented for their consideration like other

The dangers to our libe ties through the pas clouste ignorance and usurpations of our National C agrees have not escaped the careful consideration of some of the profoundest and purcet patriots which the country has ever Judge Joseph Story, whose authority ought to have weight with Massachusetts and with all men who advocate Massachusetts principles and policy at the present time, has rested the question with his usual profundity strength of intellect, and breadth of grasp. His remarks are so clear, so cloque forcible, and so applicable to the present juncneeded for the quotation we shall make from them this morning.

President's poley of tettoration:

I. solve., Therefore, in the veto of the "Freedmen's Barcau" and "Civil R gats" bills by the President, we have cause to hope that Andrew John on will stitinfully protect the pe, le and the States against the despoile purposes of the radical party, and we pladge to him corresport in all his Constitutional efforts to restore to the States and the people of the S in his that praction of errite and compacte equality in the Union to which they are an questionably children. The day arch further points on the necessity of the various State taking up a definite position on one side or the other in the stringle which the armanents of Austria seem to render more and more imminent. The dispatch accuses Austria of having violated the convention of Gazte, and assumed a threatening satisface. It expresses doubts as to the power of the Confederate States to carry out their good intentions toward I'lussia in the relative state of a Federal military organization, and points out the necessity which has arisen for latin ducing reform in the present system.

The dispatch councides as follows: "It is nagent for Pinsch to know if, and to what extent see may rely upon your assistance in case she should be attacked by dustria or forcad intowar by numest-kable memaces."
